History

Curamericas, formerly known as Andean Rural Health Care, is a not-for-profit organization dedicated to providing preventative and curative health care to indigenous women and children in developing countries.

In 1983, Curamericas was founded by Duke University and John Hopkins graduate, Henry Perry III, M.D., Ph.D., M.P.H. In conjunction with the Bolivian Ministry of Health, Curamericas was created with the goal of establishing primary health care programs that are responsive to the health needs of the community, improving child-survival within the community, and building the national and local capacity of health service providers. As a result of the widespread progress and sustainability of the Bolivian flagship program, Curamericas continues to grow and expand its program base.

A Few Program Highlights from Fiscal Year 2004 - 2005

In Bolivia, Curamericas' Programs:

- Increased the number of children between 12 and 23 months who are fully vaccinated before 13 months of age from 33.3% to 78.5%
- The percentage of children 0-23 months of age who exhibited pneumonia danger signs and were attended by a health worker increased from 37% to 86%

In Guatemala, Curamericas' Programs:

- Increased the percentage of mothers receiving at least two tetanus toxoid immunizations prior to the birth of her child from 18% to 44.6%
- Decreased the percentage of children age 0-23 months with severe malnutrition from 43% to 28%
